Insert from line 84 to 85:

11. government buildings, except where narrowly tailored, evidence-based, and necessary to protect the functioning of legislative bodies and courts, to protect places of worship and minority institutions from intimidation or address a specific,immediate threat to public safety;

Explanation / Comment

In Germany, exclusion zones exist around parliaments. I found the positions of the state parliament factions regarding these exclusion zones and the assembly laws of the individual states to be unreliable. This additional measure ensures the ability of parliaments to function and the protection of synagogues and other houses of worship, where protests can be very directly intimidating.
