CAS accepted as amended All women and girls across Europe including people at the margins on the grounds of their race, gender, gender identity, age, sexual characteristics, sexual orientation, disability, class and migration status have the right to live a life free from violence. Gender-based violence is a brutal human rights violation and an expression of the unequal power relations in our societies. We continue our unwavering fight for comprehensive EU legislation that prevents, responds to, and ends gender-based violence online and offline across the EU and addresses it from an intersectional and structural perspective. Greens emphasise the role of communities in harm prevention , strengthen victims' rights with specialized support, access to justice and protection for victims with special attention to marginalized communities. All EU member states must ratify the Istanbul Convention.

We also want to ensure AI promotes, not hampers, the Green Deal with key	Insert from line 363 to 364: The systems must be made more transparent. We need to get better at saying what is going on inside them and why. We will strive to achieve a common definition of data dignity with the other worldwide players, as data travels beyond the limit of the EU. In a world with data dignity, digital stuff would typically be connected with the humans who want to be known for having made it. In some versions of the idea, people could get paid for what they create, even when it is filtered and recombined through big models, and tech hubs would earn fees for facilitating things that people want to do. We also want to ensure AI promotes, not hampers, the Green Deal with key
